Consulting
Mme. Fantella

"Again and again I've addressed you," remarked Grace, "while you've been staring and gazing at that calendar. Aren't there enough days in the month to suit you?"

"Certainly, but this is the 15th of October—one of vital importance to me."

"What's so special about it?"

"About three weeks ago," answered Juliette, her face beaming with smiles and her eyes glistening with expectancy, "I consulted a clairvoyant, Madame Fantella."

"Madame Fantella used to see for us," interrupted Grace.

"Not this one. She is simply marvelous, predicts miraculous events and gives you the most wonderful dates."

"For instance?" asked Grace, dubiously.

"At the age of sixty-nine I will meet with a serious illness, but will recover."

"I hope you will have recovered your senses by that time and not believe in every fake fortune teller or palmist."

"I'm not superstitious, but on this very date she prophesied that a tall dark young man would invite me to the theater and come what may, under no condition should I refuse, as he would propose."

"Who is the tall dark, mysterious gent?"

"Why, Charles Charleston, of course, whose invitation I accepted immediately for tonight."

"Astounding! Surprising! Charles always seemed a confirmed bachelor to me," exclaimed Grace. "He is so attentive to all the girls."

"Little did I think I would be the fortunate one. How the girls will envy me, the wife of such a handsome, cultured, clever lawyer," said Juliette in a delighted blissful tone.

When Charles called for Juliette that evening, he found her waiting for him looking as pretty as a lily all in white. She greeted him more cordially than ever and seemed to listen intently to even the most trivial remark. All the time she was pondering. "How, when and where will he say those glorious words that can so easily be answered in one little word of three letters?"

"You seem radiant with happiness," Charles commented.

"I'm always happy when I'm with you," she answered as they left the theater, where she had not heard one word of the play.

"Then I'm all the sorrier," commenced Charles, "to tell you that next week I intend moving to New York."

"Doesn't he think I'd move away," wondered Juliette. "Why, I'd go to the depths of Africa with the man I cared for." Aloud, she managed to ask, "Why?"

"A well-known legal firm want a single young man to look after one department of their business and I have accepted their offer, which means a successful future."

"Accept my congratulations," said Juliette. "But you will not always be single?"

"For a long time to come," explained Charles. "That's the reason I'm nice to all the girls, so none can take my attentions seriously."

"Not even if you admired the girl greatly," asked Juliette, fast losing confidence in Madame Fantella.

"No, because my mother on her death-bed exacted a promise from me that I would not marry until my sisters were married. As the kids are only seven and nine years now, my benedict days are in the dim future."

Charles was so interested in telling about his run of affairs and prospects that he failed to notice how listless and weary Juliette was.

"I shall never forget what a pleasant evening I spent," he said as he left her.

"I'll never forget it either," thought Juliette, tearing the calendar to shreds. "That I have wasted three weeks of my life thinking, hoping and dreaming of that conceited fool! Madame Fantella is certainly wonderful in predicting occurrences that don't occur."

Gaynor's Bible Neglected.

On his tour Mayor Gaynor of New York stopped at Great Barrington to look at the library of the town, to which, 14 years ago, while a summer resident there, he presented a copy of the Bible.

At that time he wanted a copy for reference in preparing a speech he was to make and was shocked to find that there was no copy of the Bible in the generous collection of bound volumes of which the town had always been proud. He gave a copy to the town library, and on the fly leaf of the book he wrote:

"I have found a great many libraries which lacked a great many books, but never before have I found one like this, which lacked the Great Book."

The town has guarded the Gaynor Bible zealously since 1897. It is in the pink of condition, never apparently having been opened; in fact, some of the leaves are still uncut.—Waterbury Post.

Just Suited.

"Mrs. Sykes is so reserved that she ought to get a position in the weather bureau."

"What has her reserve got to do with qualifications for that office?"

"Oh, when she speaks at a distance to one, she gives such cool waves."

HEALTH NOW FASHIONABLE

Women of the Educated Classes Today
Worship at Altar of the Goddess Hygeia.

"Look to your health," said quaint old Isaac Walton, "and if you have it, praise God, and value it next to a good conscience." Among the educated classes the value of health was never more keenly appreciated than it is today. All kinds of devices are resorted to, in order to achieve and maintain it, and many people deny themselves all in order to follow in the footsteps of the Goddess Hygeia. They forswear choice foods, and look not upon the wine when it sparkles with amber clarity. The simplest fare contents them and water out of a wooden bowl is a nectar to them if only it confers upon them the supreme blessing of health.

In a word, to be healthy is to be fashionable, and what is fashionable must be attained at any cost. The woman who simulated a perpetual state of semi-invalidism, who reclined on a sofa all day long reading novels, who was always afflicted with the "vapours" (whatever that may mean), has now disappeared from our midst. One might search from Dan to Beersheba and yet not find her. It is in the hockey field and on the golfing greens that one must look for her sinewy successors. There can be no question that so far as the middle and upper classes are concerned, the importance of health and of subscribing to all the laws pertaining thereto is fully realized.

SOME OLD COURT CUSTOMS

Ancient Rules for Guidance of Officers and Gentlemen When Dining With Royalty.

Apropos of the recent coronation ceremonies in London, it is interesting to note the difference between court etiquette of today and that practiced 200 years ago.

Regulations prescribed by the lord chamberlain at that period in the history of the realm seem ridiculous in the extreme to us in this enlightened time, notwithstanding some of the customs today are decidedly unique.

For the benefit of officers, many of them of noble families, these rules were laid down: When invited to dine with royal persons, they were to be neatly dressed, with clean coats and boots, and were not to enter the room in a half-drunken condition.

They were warned not to drink after each mouthful, as that would make them drunk too soon, or to empty more than one goblet of wine after every two dishes.

They were not to put their hands in their plates, their bones under the table, lick their fingers, wipe their noses on the tablecloth, or to drink enough to make them fall off the chairs or walk with a staggering stride.

These are extracts from a set of rules carefully drawn up for the guidance of officers and gentlemen of noble families, which show that manners have improved since 1642.

SHINGLED ROOFS FORBIDDEN.

In the south, which is regarded by many as being less progressive than New England, appreciation of the danger of wooden roofs is growing. A few months ago Jackson, Miss., decided to prohibit shingle and board roofs; and now Birmingham, Ala., has passed an anti-shingle ordinance to take effect January 1, 1912. New England has furnished the object lesson which the southern cities are heeding, but the great fires in Portland, Bangor and Chelsea do not appear to have impressed upon New England people the dangers of shingles exposed to sparks carried long distances by the wind. The action of Jackson and Birmingham affords a good precedent for northern cities.

SHE KNEW IT.

"I have decided to quit this company tonight," said the prima donna, as she flounced into the manager's office.

"But, my dear Miss Rivington," he protested, "we have nobody to take your place."

"That's why I have decided to quit tonight."

MATTER OF SOUND.

"Through sin we lose our heirship to heaven," said the preacher. And Willie, with his thoughts upon aviation, wanted to know if the "airship" referred to was a biplane or a monoplane.
